Dear Kentucky Public Service Commission:

This is the worst possible time to build a new coal-fired power plant in Trimble County. As I am sure you are well aware, the environmental reasons not to build are: air pollution, acid rain, carbon emissions, and bad mining practices. The financial reasons are increasing rates in a down economy and financing carbon caps in the near future. A new old-style plant would be bad for Kentucky and bad business for LG&E.

We have always built power capacity based on demand, without questioning the viability of the demand itself. Our future depends on a more creative approach.

Thank you,
Sam Avery
